RHINELANDER, WISCONSIN, THURSDAY, MAY 5, 1892.

TERMS—$1.50 IN ADVANCE.

DOYLE IS STILL CHAIRMAN

And From Present Appearances he is Likely to Remain so.

The contested Minocqua election case came up before Judge Burden in circuit court last Thursday. The question argued was whether or not the inspectors of election should re-assemble and declare the number of votes cast in Minocqua, leaving out the second precinct. The court decided that the order for them to do so should be issued. This would appear to be a victory for Mercer, but in reality it amounts to no more than the awarding of a baseball pennant to Oshkosh would. The decision was promptly appealed from by Attorney Billings, and a stay granted after an argument and citations by Sam Miller. The point will now come up before the Supreme court and when it is decided, in case Mercer again gets the decision, the case is back where it started practically, as to secure the office he must begin proceedings in the regular way. Doyle will continue to act, together with all other present Minocqua town officers, and no power can now remove them until their time is about up. The question of title to the office has not yet been in court, and before the complicated machinery of the Circuit and Supreme courts could unravel it, it would be well along towards next election.

A Brave Deed.

A few days ago, at Rhinelander, Orrie Lamphier had a chance to show what kind of stuff Wausau boys are made of. Orrie and Dan Hamman, both of whom lately moved from Wausau, had been working on the boom. Orrie stepped ashore for a moment, when looking back he saw Hamman struggling in the water; grabbing a pike-pole, Orrie started to the rescue. By running out on a small boom he was able to fix the pike in Hamman's clothing, who by this time was nearly drowned. The boom sank until Orrie was up to his shoulders in water and both rescuer and rescued were in a good way to share the same fate, when help finally came and both men were got ashore. Hamman was only revived after the hardest kind of work, but Orrie, after warming up inside and out, was little the worse for his cold bath. Mr. Lamphier's many Wausau friends are proud of him but such deeds are what we expect of our piny boys. —Wausau Pilot Review.

The Lyceum—"Little Trixie."

Such is the title of a musical comedy presented at this theatre last evening. It is replete with fun and frolic, and answers well as vehicle for the antics and specialties of some very clever people. First among the performers is May Smith Robbins, who with unquestioned versatility succeeds in the presentation of several characters, all which are flavored with a sparkle and humor that is interesting. She is well endowed with ability as a character impersonator, and is more than ordinary as a vocalist. The favor with which both play, soubrette and company were received last night should stand as a sure sign that the Lyceum will do the biggest week of the season thus far.—Grand Rapids (Mich.) Telegram.

At the Grand Opera House, Wednesday, May 11.

Death of Frank Lambert.

One year ago Frank Lambert was a healthy and as robust a man as there was in Rhinelander. His lease of life appeared to be of a yet long duration, but on Monday he died after a few months' struggle with quick consumption. A wife and three children survive him. He has been a respected citizen of Rhinelander for the past five years, coming here from Needah. He was originally from Quebec, Canada, having been born near that city 48 years ago. The funeral services were held at the Catholic church yesterday morning being conducted by Father Joly. Mrs. Lambert has the sympathy of many friends in her affliction.

The Sewerage System.

At its meeting Tuesday the town board closed a contract with Edgar Williams, of Chicago, an experienced engineer, to make a complete survey of all the platted part of Rhinelander east of the Wisconsin river, and furnish an estimate of the cost of putting in a complete sewerage system, or so much as the electors may desire to contract for at the next town meeting. The board pay Williams $400 for his work. Rhinelander stands more in need of sewerage than of any other one thing and it is a good move on the part of the board to have the work started.

ONEIDA WAS SUCCESSFUL.

The Next Republican Congressional Convention Will Be Here.

P. W. McIntyre, H. C. Morrill and C. C. Yawkey, Oneida county's delegates to the Congressional Convention at Merrill, went there with a hope of securing the next convention for Rhinelander and the Republicans of this county desired to have C. C. Yawkey go to Minneapolis next month to assist in renominating President Harrison. In both cases were they successful. By resolution, the delegates instructed the chairman to call the convention for nominating a congressman at Rhinelander, and with two opposing candidates Cy. C. Yawkey was elected an alternate delegate to Minneapolis, receiving 37 out of 44 votes. The delegation got all they went after and were entirely satisfied.

The convention was one of the most harmonious and enthusiastic ever held. Each county in the great Ninth district was represented by a full quota of delegates and the proceedings were marked throughout with ability, harmony and enthusiasm. Hon. M. H. McCord was chosen temporary chairman and on being escorted to the rostrum, delivered a ringing speech on Republicanism and painted a promising outlook for the party in the coming national struggle. The resolutions adopted were concise, loyal to the present national administration and free from the usual flamboyance of such effusions. C. S. Curtis, of Wausau, and W. H. Reynolds, of Ashland, were chosen national delegates, with C. C. Yawkey and Captain Davidson, of Florence, as alternates. E. H. Winchester, of Taylor, was chosen as the Ninth district presidential elector.

The next convention, which will doubtless be held in June or July, and will no doubt renominate M. H. McCord for congress, will be a large gathering. Rhinelander will entertain the delegates well, and it will do them good to get into a live town, even if not as large as they usually visit on such occasions. They can here see the evidences of life and prosperity in the only Republican city of any size in the valley.

Thumped the Boss.

Findlay McDonald, of Wausau, was the victim of a malicious assault last Saturday at the hands of one of his river drivers named George Johnson. The latter claimed that McDonald had cheated his brother out of a half day's work. Without warning he walked up to Findlay who was talking with another man, and dealt him a blow on the cheek which laid Findlay out on the grass. He then struck him two or three times when his victim was down. McDonald's face was horribly battered. Both eyes were colored and swollen nearly closed, while his cheek protruded in painful shape. He was attended by Doctor Daniels, and Johnson was attended by the sheriff. Before Justice Nichols he was bound over to the circuit court in bonds of $400, which were immediately furnished.

A Good Show Coming.

The Little Trixie company, which plays at the Grand next Wednesday evening, is a first-class comedy aggregation, and we have no hesitancy in recommending them to the people as an entertainment worthy of support. Rhinelander has so few good shows that when one does come the people not only desire to know it but will give it a liberal patronage. Little Trixie is as good a company as ever played in this section, and all who attend may be certain of getting full value for their money.

Wanted.

A competent girl to do housework, at M. H. Greenley's.

THE SEASON'S START.

The Rhinelander Mills All Start Running In Good Shape.

The beginning of Rhinelander's cut of over a hundred million feet of lumber for '92, has been inaugurated by all the mills this week. Brown Bros.' mill is doing all that the firm could desire, and everything about the establishment has got down to a smooth running gait. The Rhinelander Lumber & Shingle Co.'s mill, under the management of Mr. Freeman, is doing better work than ever before. They are running out over fifty thousand a day on the rotary, and the shingle department, under the management of Mark Mason, is running to its full capacity. Stevens & Son's new band mill started up Tuesday in a very satisfactory way and the night and day cut of this mill will be fully up to expectations. Olson & Mickeljohn began sawing Monday and as usual the mill is cutting satisfactorily, both in regard to quantity and quality of work. The Clayton mill is working steadily and promises to turn out a big season's cut. Conro & Son started Monday and already have seven and a half million of logs to work on. They will cut in the neighborhood of ten million. Brown & Robbins began sawing Tuesday. Their mill, which last season made the banner cut of the town, has been put into shape to readily duplicate the job. The Oneida Lumber Co.'s mill is being overhauled as rapidly as possible and will be running next week. The outlook from a lumber point of view for us this summer is all that could be desired. Rhinelander is bound to become the lumber town of the Wisconsin Valley and she is a coming fast.

Judging from the amount of goods going out of Lewis Hardware Co.'s Store in the builders' line, such as sash, doors, nails, locks and hinges, one would think everybody in town was building a house. They have by far the largest stock to choose from, and buying in such large quantities for both stores at Antigo and here it gives them lower prices and thereby enables them to give better prices than anyone else north of Milwaukee. They carry everything in the builders' line such as nails, doors, windows, locks, hinges, paints, oils, etc., etc.

J. W. Crockett has leased the Eagle hotel to Kairns & Boyce for a year. They have taken possession and propose running the house in such shape that they will secure a good share of the patronage. The K. P. party last evening at the Grand Opera House was a very pleasant affair socially, but hardly up to expectations financially. The attendance was not enough to defray the heavy expense of music, etc. Dunn's orchestra furnished the music and gave good satisfaction.

Somewhat Politic.

St. Paul has been a Democratic city for over twenty years. None but Democrats have served as mayor since 1872. Last Tuesday a Republican mayor was elected by over 2000 majority; the council is Republican; likewise the comptroller, treasurer and whatever else was voted for. Verily, the signs of the times—etc.

The Oshkosh Times begins now to hedge and does not claim that the supreme court decision in the gerrymander case knocks out the appointment of 1887. Before we get through with this thing we will have all the Democratic organs arguing that the appointment of 1887 was so fair and angelic a one as to leave its legality and the legality of the "hold-over" senators elected under it a matter beyond dispute. The yeast is working.

If Senator Mills was only eligible he would make a strong Democratic candidate for president. But "the sectional" Democratic party never looks for a candidate in the Southern tier. The fellows down there are only used for voting purposes.

Only 60 per cent. of the white children in Kentucky are enrolled in the public schools, and one-half of these attend. Kentucky bids fair to remain a Democratic state for another generation.

New York City has 377,755 aliens. No wonder New York always votes the free-trade ticket.

The thing Democrats are hunting for now is "a Western man who can carry his own State." Don't all yell at once.

Missouri has become a doubtful state. Senator Vest is not waging "a battle to the death" on protection this year.

CHAPTER VIII. "LIKE SWEET BELLS JANGLED OUT OF TUNE AND HARM."

Two young faces were sheltered under the light shadow of some larches in Kew Gardens. It was a Sunday afternoon; Sunday groups were scattered all over the grounds, and the man followed their movements with a look of disgust; but the girl, sitting quietly on the grass, took in all the beauty of the place with pure and simple delight. The sun of paradise seemed to be shining on these golden paths; it was one of those moments when a poor daughter of earth has caught a glimpse of that old garden where God's first pair of lovers rejoiced together. They had talked a little, but silence seemed to suit them best. It was a rare thing for Michael Chase to be silent; but there were matters in his mind that he did not care to discuss with his companion. He had been kind—languidly kind perhaps—but Olive was well contented. He had spent some hours in her company without finding a single fault with anything that she wore, or said, or did. She could enjoy the bliss of sitting by his side in peace. This she thought, was the sort of happiness that she had always waited and longed for. Flowers, the soft shade of trees, summer sunlight, and the presence of the man who was the sole king of her heart. What more could a woman desire? But she did not give voice to her joy. If you talk about happiness it is too apt to desert you. It is an unresisting spirit, who always hovers over us with wings outspread, ready for an instant flight.

Some one passing by the couple under the larches said to himself that the man was not half worthy of the girl. Her face, with its rich, sunlit loveliness, had haunted Seaward Aylstone for many a day; and now he came upon it unawares, glowing out of the soft gloom of the trees. He had come down to Kew to study certain effects of light and shade, and then almost forgot the purpose that had brought him there. Yes; it was the same face that he had seen bending over the flowers in the Regent street shop, and it had seemed to him that one of his vague dreams of beauty had suddenly taken shape and become a reality. But this was the first time he had ever seen her out of the shop and its surroundings, and all her charms seemed doubled and trebled to-day. Her lips, scarlet as japonica blossoms, were parted in an unconscious smile. Hitherto he had only beheld her grave; now she was quietly, yet girlishly gay. Until this moment he had not realized how young she was, nor how new the world appeared to her. That fresh delight, that untroubled belief which only comes once in a lifetime, these glorious follies of youth, were hers still.

The young man by her side, short, slightly made and blue-eyed, inspired Seaward with sudden and unutterable detestation. The young man's eyes had a cunning and complacent twinkle in them, and they were set too near together. Yet he was what women call "nice looking," and had a fresh complexion and fair, curly hair; and his clothes were really very well made and carefully—too carefully put on. It was clear that he did not belong to 'Arry and his friends, and his face gave evidence of sober and decorous living. But instead of respecting him for his virtues, Seaward Aylstone only disliked him the more for them. It was wrong, it was unreasonable, but it was human. There is a certain form of moral excellence which never fails to be exasperating.

The pair were quite unconscious of his scrutiny; the young man was too much self-absorbed to notice him, and the girl was too happy to be observant. He went his way, feeling unaccountably sore, and left them still sitting in their shady nook under the trees.

But if Seaward Aylstone had lingered a little longer in their neighborhood he would have seen a change in the lovely face that had been so bright with innocent joy. Olive's cup was so full that it brimmed over at last. Instead of preserving that spell of blissful silence unbroken, she was unwise enough to speak.

"Michael, is not this a perfect day? Is it possible for us ever to be happier than we are at this moment?" The curl of his lip answered her even before his words came. Her question had broken in upon the great plans that he was making for the future; and, in truth, success was so near that he had a right to think of using it. It was no vague vision that he had been conjuring up, the goal was all but gained, and already he was building, in fancy, the palace in which he should take his rest. Best! The word had no real meaning for him, the longings in his heart could never be stilled, never be satisfied by the attainment of his first desire. Poor Olive's little speech stirred up an angry scorn within him. He had been thinking with a...

might for grand things, and any of the commonest pleasures in life were good enough for her. "I am not quite such a fool," he said, "as to mistake a lazy hour in the sunshine for perfect happiness. If this was the best moment that life could give me I should not care to go on living. Olive, you have no aspirations. You do not want to rise, you do not sympathize with me in my effort to succeed. It is disappointing, very disappointing to find that you are just as commonplace and unambitious as you used to be at Eastmeon."

For an instant she did not reply. There were the same velvet glades, the same rich foliage, the same blaze of flame-colored blossoms before her eyes, but the glory of the gardens was gone. The gates of her Eden had closed without a single note of warning, the bright spirit, who had been singing his sweet song in her ears, had soared far out of reach. Her golden hour was over. "I am sorry that I have disappointed you," she said at last. Her voice was as musical as ever, but there was a touch of proud patience in her manner that irritated him more than pettishness would have done. Clever as he was, high as he had risen, he had failed of late to make her acknowledge his superiority. And he knew that she had not spoken truly in saying that she was the same girl of the old Eastmeon days. She was, in some respects, a different Olive, far more cultivated, far more beautiful, and with a slow growing consciousness of her own worth.

"You don't appreciate me," he went on, venting on her the pent-up anger of weeks. "Any idle fellow who had not two ideas in his head would have suited you as well as I do. You ask for nothing better than common enjoyment, cheap holiday pleasures, such as any workingman can give his sweetheart. And I have been toiling and racking my brains to win money and a high social position for us both!" "Michael," she said gently, yet bravely, "you are saying things that are not true. No one could ever have suited me as well as the man I have always loved. And I am not unambitious; I, too, have dreamed of a higher life, and have striven after my ideal in my own way."

"In your own way, yes; but not in my way," he answered quickly, with an angry glitter in his blue eyes.

"Perhaps not quite in your way, Michael. I cannot believe—I never have believed—that success is the sole object of existence. Nor do I think that success alone ever yet made a man or woman happy. George Eliot says that

IN KEW GARDENS.

"we can only have the highest happiness, such as goes along with being a great man, by having wide thoughts, and much feeling for the rest of the world as well as ourselves."

"George Eliot was a mere dreamer, with the gift of telling her dreams in good English," he cried, impatiently. "I suppose that idiot, Samuel Wake, has been giving her books to you, and making you more sentimental and cloudy than you were before. Why don't you read Smiles and clear the mist away from your brain?" "I have read Smiles, Michael," she replied quietly. "And I am weak enough to care more for the Robert Stephenson who took thought for little children and birds, than for the great inventor. The very side of him that you think lowest, seems to me the highest. Remember I am not depreciating his splendid energy, I only mean that it was not the noblest part of man, nor could it, without other qualities, have made him really great."

"The sparkle of wrath had died out of Michael's eyes; but his face expressed a cold contempt. "We are wasting time here," he said, frigidly. "I will take you back to your uncle's house, Olive; and then I will go home to my own room. This hot day has given me a headache."

She was anxious and remorseful in an instant, ready to blame herself for not having seen that he was suffering. She had been wrapped in a happy dream under the trees, and all the while he had been sitting by her side, feeling weary and ill! And then she had worried him with her talk, and made the headache worse.

"Oh! Michael," she said, rising, and looking at him with a glance that few men could have met unmoved; "I am afraid I have been selfish. It was for my sake that we came here, dear; and you have paid dearly for the pleasure you have given me. What can I do for you?"

"Nothing," he answered, as coldly as before. "I shall go to my room and rest. Mine is a hard-working brain, and anything in the shape of a dispute always disturbs me."

"Dear Michael, if any words of mine have disturbed you I am more than sorry. As to disputes, we will never have any more. We are always one in heart, are we not?"

As she spoke she clung to his arm for a second, trembling, and with her heart beating. He disengaged himself at once.

"People are looking at us," he said. "Do remember that we are in Kew gardens, and not in Eastmeon fields! I am in no mood now for scenes and sentimental talk, Olive."

She looked at him again once, steadily and wistfully, with eyes that seemed to read him through and through. Then she walked on quietly by his side, pale, but calm; and troubled him with no more loving words or inconvenient demonstrations.

The Sunday throngs were crowding all about them; fathers and mothers with their children, girls walking happily, sometimes noisily, with their sweethearts. Their voices and laughter seemed to come from an outside world in which Olive had no part. She scarcely knew whether they were phantoms or living people; only Michael, with his cold set face, was miserably real. He would not look at her, he did not speak, and they reached the station and got into a train in silence.

CHAPTER IX. "GREAT FEELINGS RATH SHE OF HER OWN."

Uncle Wake was alone in the house when Olive came in; his wife had gone to see their married daughter, and had left him, surrounded with books, at the open window of the sitting-room upstairs. He had not thought that Olive would return till evening.

When he opened the door and saw her standing outside alone, he knew that the time he was looking for was nigh at hand. It was a time that he dreaded, for there was no torture on earth that Samuel Wake would not have endured to save a woman from pain. But who does not know those dark places where we must leave our beloved ones to walk alone? It is their feet, not ours, that must tread the thorny path; we can but wait till the trial is ended, before we come with our balms of healing. And the old man, wise with the knowledge of one who has studied humanity, was waiting patiently for the hour when his help would be needed.

"So you have come back to cheer the old uncle in his solitude," he said, as she entered. "My wife has gone to spend the evening with poor Jessie."

She tried to speak, but her lips trembled, and the words would not come. "You are tired, my child," he added, with a tenderness that set her tears flowing. "Go and lie down on the old sofa in the parlor upstairs; it is a good resting place, as I have reason to know. No need to talk to the old uncle! He understands silence, and it comforts him to look at you, even if he does not hear your voice."

Already soothed, although she could not hide her tears, Olive went straight to her own little room, and laid aside the pretty bonnet that she had trimmed with such natural pleasure. What had she to do with "the outward adorning" any more? A sore heart has little thought for the body that contains it. Poor Olive tossed the bonnet on the bed, and glanced with disgust at the bunch of scarlet poppies and wheat ears that she had arranged with skillful fingers. Michael had not given them one look, and they had been worn for his eyes alone.

It was no small consolation to feel that she need not wear a mask before Uncle Wake. He had seen that she was crying, and she knew that she would not question her. She went softly down to the large parlor, and made her way to the old chintz-covered sofa that was pushed into a shady corner out of the light, and then, worn out with her sorrow, she closed her eyes and lay still. Large men, like Samuel Wake, often tread lightly, and his niece did not hear his approach till he came to her side, speaking in the deep, kindly voice that always conveyed ideas of help and strength.

"Come, Olive," he said, "I am as good a tea-maker as you can find anywhere. Drink this and eat some of my toast. Young people always forget food when they go out and take their pleasure."

To please him the weary brown head lifted itself from its resting-place; Olive ate and drank, and was surprised to find herself really better for the tea. He went back to his books, and she sank again on the sofa cushions, but presently her voice called him to her side once more. "Uncle, do you mind sitting nearer to me? I am so very, very lonely."

The poor voice quavered sadly. Samuel Wake rose from his seat and drew a chair close to the couch.

"What is it, my child?" he asked, laying his hand on her hair. "A lover's quarrel?"

"Yes," she whispered. "The first we have ever had."

"Well, well, we all know that lovers never part after a first quarrel," he said, in a quiet matter-of-fact tone that calmed her nerves. "What was it all about, little one, if an old man may ask?"

"It arose out of a very simple speech of mine which seemed to annoy Michael," answered Olive, her cheeks flushing and paling as she recalled the afternoon's experience. "We were sitting under the trees in Kew Gardens, and I asked him if we could possibly be happier than we were then?"

DID NOT HEAR HIS APPROACH.

"Michael took offense because you were too easily contented, and one word followed another?" said Uncle Wake.

"Yes," Olive considered for a moment, and then repeated all that she could remember of the conversation. Afterwards a silence fell upon them both, and the roll of wheels in the Strand sounded but faintly in their ears. It was Olive who broke the pause.

"If I could only believe that this was merely a difference of opinion, and not a difference of spirit, I should be easier," she said. "But Michael seems to think that my ideal life is an absurd dream. He cannot realize any kind of happiness that is not founded on self-interest alone. He cannot comprehend any joy outside himself. Oh, how horrible it seems to say these things about the man whom I love with all my heart! Help me, Uncle Wake, speak kind words and comfort me!"

This was an appeal which Samuel had not expected to hear for many a day. He had not known that Olive had been rapidly gaining powers of penetration. He had not thought that the books he had given her would have done their work so soon. And how could he dare soothe her with false comfort, or give her the broken reed of a lie to lean upon? How could he throw dust in the eyes that saw Michael as he really was, and yet prayed to be blinded?

"Olive," he said, tenderly, "I am afraid it is the fate of nearly all good women to be somewhat disappointed in the men they love. A man's daily struggle with the world is almost sure to harden him. Every true woman has within her that capacity for self-sacrifice which makes it easy for her to comprehend the one great sacrifice. Like her Master, she longs to go about among the people, and do them good."

"But will he never feel as I do?" she asked, mournfully.

"Not altogether, perhaps. Olive, you must learn to love him without giving up the best part of yourself for his sake. You must not pluck out your own white wings because he cannot soar. If you do this, you will neither content him nor yourself. You will always be haunted by the sense of loss, and he will know that you are not satisfied."

She turned her eyes upon him with a gaze of intense anxiety.

"How can two walk together unless their spirits are one?" she said, with a

A Lumbermen's Rendezvous.

This term might be applied to Stevens
Point, located on the Wisconsin Central Lines, at the gateway to the vast forest region which extends North to Lake Superior, a distance of 200 miles without a break, on account of its vast lumber interests. The Wisconsin River to which the lumbermen have given the familiar and somewhat affectionate title of "Old Wisconsin," not alone acts as a lumber feeder to the city by furnishing through its numerous tributaries an outlet for thousands of acres of pine in the upper country, but it furnishes a water power that is second only to that of Neenah and Menasha, which cities are also located on the "Central." Millions of feet of lumber are cut every year, giving employment to hundreds of men. In addition to the lumber trade, it has numerous other manufactures; it is here where the large car shops of the Wisconsin Central Lines are located.
For tickets, maps, pamphlets and full information apply to G. F. McNeill,

THAT BROTHER OF MINE.

Who is it that comes in like a whirlwind, And closes the door with a slam, And before he has taken his hat off, Calls out for "some bread and some jam?" Who is it that whistles so merrily As he works at some tangle of twine That will send his kite up into cloudland? Why, of course, it is that brother of mine.

Who is it that, when I am weary, Has always a hole in his coat, A button to sew on in a hurry, A sail to be made for a boat? Who is it that keeps in my basket This marbles and long fishing line, And expects, undisturbed, there to find them? No one else but that brother of mine.

Who is it that tips about so softly Whenever I'm sick or in pain— And is every minute forgetting And whistling some head-snatching strain? Who is it that, when he is trying To be just as still as he can, Is always most terribly noisy? My brother, of course—he's the man.

Who is it I'd rather have by me When in need of a true, honest friend; Who is it that I shall miss sadly When his boyhood has come to an end? And when he is far from the old home, And I long for a glimpse of sunshine, Whom, then, do you think I shall send for? Why, of course, for that brother of mine. —Agnes L. Pratt, in Good Housekeeping.

ADAM HOLCOMB'S WILL.

A Deed of Kindness and What Came of It.

Adam Holcomb was dead at last—dead after seventy years of money-getting, and the grave had closed over him. He had no children, for he had led a single life, indeed, so it was said, though nothing was certainly known, by an early disappointment which had warped his nature, and made him lead a solitary and selfish life, given up to Mammon alone.

Adam Holcomb was dead, and as yet no one knew what disposition he had made of his money.

Three days after the funeral, the next-of-kin and possible heirs were collected in the office of the lawyer, who was the custodian of the will and private papers of the deceased. They were few in numbers for the family was not a large one. There were but three, and these three may be briefly described.

First came James Holcomb, a nephew of the deceased, a vain, selfish, worldly man, all his thoughts centered upon himself and his own family who had never been known to give a penny for any charitable purpose.

Next came Harvey Holcomb, a cousin of the last-named, and about the same age. He was tall, thin and angular. He belonged to the legal profession, in which he had managed to pick up considerable money, though his reputation was none of the best. He was considered tricky, willing to undertake any cause, however disreputable, for money. He was married and had a family, for whom he provided in a grudging manner. He, too, had nourished sanguine hopes of finding himself much better off after his uncle's death.

Last came a young man, presenting a strong contrast to the other two. He was of light complexion, brown hair, clear blue eyes, and an attractive face. He was barely twenty-five years of age, very plainly dressed, and with a modest manner which prepossessed one in his favor. He was the son of old Adam Holcomb's youngest sister, who had married a poor minister, and her son, Alfred Graves, was studying medicine, for which he had a decided predilection. But he had been cramped by narrow means, and was even now teaching in a country school, hoping to obtain enough by this means to pay for his college course. He had applied to each of his two relatives present for a small temporary loan, to help him complete his studies, but without effect. He had been curtly refused by both.

He had come here to-day, as a matter of form, without the slightest expectation of benefitting by the will of his late relative. He had known him but slightly, and never received any encouragement upon which he could build a hope. Yet if he could but receive a legacy of even three hundred dollars, he thought, it would help him materially. That was the amount which he had vainly sought to borrow of the merchant and lawyer, now present with him at the reading of Adam Holcomb's last will and testament.

The merchant and lawyer conversed while waiting for Squire Brief.

"Have you any idea, cousin, how much the old gentleman had accumulated?" asked James Holcomb.

"I have heard it estimated at two hundred and fifty thousand dollars!" was the reply.

"That is a large sum. I hope he has not been unjust enough to squander any of it on charitable societies."

"I hope not. That would be a great piece of injustice to his relations."

"He never dropped anything to you about the disposition he intended to make of his property, did he?"

"Not he! He was a close man, very," said the other. "I once tried to worm something out of him, but didn't get much satisfaction."

"What did he say?"

"He said that he thought of endowing an asylum for fools and lunatics, and that I could tell whether I was likely to be benefited by his so doing."

"Ho! ho!" laughed James, shaking his capacious sides; "he got you there, eh?"

"I don't see it," said the lawyer, sourly. "You don't appreciate the joke, eh?"

"It was a foolish piece of impertinence. However, everybody knows what the old man was, and I let it pass. If it had been anyone else, I would have given them as good as they sent."

"But you were afraid it would spoil your chances, eh?"

"As to that, I have no idea. There is no question that we ought to be joint heirs."

"True," returned James. "That would give one hundred and twenty-five thousand apiece. That would satisfy me."

"How about Alfred's chances?" queried the lawyer, glancing sharply to that part of the office where the young man was quietly seated.

"Oh, he'll get nothing," said the merchant, contemptuously. "He belongs to a beggarly stock, and a beggar he'll remain to the end of his days. Going to be a doctor, I hear."

"Well, I wish him joy of his profession, if he ever gets in it, which is somewhat doubtful. He wanted to borrow three hundred dollars of me the other day."

"And of me. Did you let him have it?"

"Not I. I've enough to do with my money without giving it away. Of course he'd never have repaid it."

"No, I suppose not. The coolness of some people is refreshing."

"Well, I take it for granted old Adam was much too shrewd to lavish any of his money on such a fellow."

"Trust him for that."

The young man was engaged in reading a volume he had taken up, and did not hear this conversation.

It was interrupted by the entrance of Mr. Brief. Both the merchant and the lawyer greeted him with deference and cordiality, as a man whose words might bring them prosperity or disappointment.

Alfred Graves rose in a quiet, gentlemanly manner, and bowed with the courtesy which was habitual to him.

"Gentlemen," the attorney said, "I hold in my hand the will of your late relative. I will at once proceed to read it."

Of course his words commanded instant attention. All bent forward to listen.

After the usual formula, came the following item:

"I give and bequeath to my nephew, James Holcomb, the sum of five thousand dollars to be held in trust for his children."

"To my nephew, Henry Holcomb, I likewise give the sum of five thousand dollars to be held in trust for his children, to whose sole use the income shall annually be applied."

"To my only remaining nephew, Alfred Graves, I give the sum of two thousand dollars to be appropriated to his own use as he may see fit."

"I set aside the sum of two hundred thousand dollars to establish a public library in my native town, one quarter to be appropriated to the erection of a suitable building and the remainder to constitute a fund, of which the income only shall be employed for the purchase of books."

Here the notary made a pause. The merchant and lawyer sat with looks of blank disappointment and anger, which they made no attempt to conceal.

"He had no right to defraud his relatives in this way," muttered James.

"It is a miserable imposition," said Henry Holcomb, "to put us off with such a niggardly sum."

"For my part, I am quite satisfied," said the young man. "I have received more than I expected."

"Oh, yes; it will be a great thing for a beggar like you," said James, sarcastically.

"I am not a beggar," returned the young man, proudly.

"Gentlemen," said the lawyer, "I have not finished reading the will."

"My faithful old dog, Scipio, who is now somewhat infirm, I trust one of my nephews will be willing to take home, and treat him gently for the sake of the master to whom he was attached."

"That's cool!" ejaculated James. "As for me, I don't choose to be bothered with the dog."

"But," said the lawyer, "since your uncle has given you a legacy, are you not willing to incur this slight care and expense?"

"I must absolutely refuse. Mrs. Holcomb does not like dogs, nor I. Moreover, my uncle has treated me too severely for me to inconvenience myself much on his account."

"Then, will you take him?" asked the solicitor, turning to the lawyer.

"Not I," said he, shrugging his shoulders. "The dog may starve for want of care."

"And you, sir?" turning to Alfred Graves.

"I will assume the charge of Scipio," said Alfred Graves. "It is a slight acknowledgment for my uncle's legacy."

"You may find him troublesome."

"That will make no difference. While he lives, he shall be comfortably cared for."

"What a model nephew!" said the merchant, sarcastically.

"Good young man!" said the other relative, with a sneer.

"Gentlemen," said the attorney, "I will now read the codicil."

The two older men looked at each other in surprise, which changed into rage and dismay as they listened.

"To that one of my nephews who shall agree to take charge of my dog, being yet unacquainted with this provision of my will, I bequeath the residue of my property, amounting, as near as I can estimate, to one hundred thousand dollars."

"You knew of this!" exclaimed the elder men, turning wrathful faces towards Alfred Graves.

"Not a word," said the young man. "I am as much astonished as you can be."

"No one knew of it except myself," said the attorney. "I congratulate you, Mr. Graves, on your large accession of wealth."

"I receive it gratefully. I trust I shall make a good use of it," said the young man.

"I hope now to repay my parents for the sacrifices they have made in my behalf."

"If I had but known," said the merchant, with bitter regret. "I have thrown away a fortune."

"And I," chimed in the lawyer, ruefully.

But there was no help for it. The deed was done. The two disappointed men left the house, feeling anything but grateful to the uncle who they persuaded themselves had cruelly wronged them.

But there was a modest little home that was made glad by the news of Alfred's good fortune, and in his hands the money has brought a blessing with it, for it has been made a fountain of good deeds and charitable influences.—Home Queen.

NAVAL WAR COLLEGE.

Located On Coaster's Harbor Island, Near Newport, R. I.

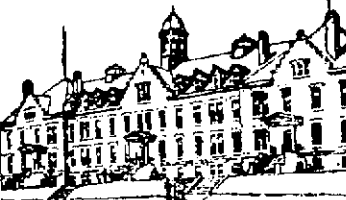

Few if any of the acts of the present naval administration will redound more to its credit, or be of more permanent value to the naval profession, than the reestablishment of the Naval War College, says Harper's Weekly. The rapidity with which the work of putting up the new building for the use of the college and the thoroughness of its construction are characteristic of the energy which the present head of the navy has infused into every branch of the public service subject to his control.

Bids for the construction of the college building were opened at the navy department, Washington, last August, and now we find the building practically completed.

When it is considered that the building is of granite, 210 feet long by 48 deep, one may appreciate the manner in which the work has been pushed ahead. Indeed, it has proceeded so rapidly and so unostentatiously that it was not until the daily press had announced the detail of Capt. A. T. Mahan, U. S. N., as president of the college that the public was aware of its rehabilitation.

"University extension," which is now "having its say" in the great centers of learning, is only partially applicable to the war college. A more just comparison would be to liken it to the staff college, which forms such an important feature in almost every system of military education abroad.

Military writers define a staff as the body of officers and their assistants whose special function is the direction of the mass which constitutes the force of an army. The value of a staff, it has been well said, lies in the practice, the instruction, the activity, the zeal, the patriotism and the capacity of its components. The perfection of the present German staff is due to the ability and devotion of Von Moltke—a perfection of organization which carried the German army to the gates of Vienna and of Paris, and enabled it to capture the entire army of France.

Without a staff to lean upon, the head of a military or naval establishment would, when started out of the dull routine of peace, find himself helpless. Bureau officers, fully occupied with the daily routine of their office, have no time for the duties which devolve upon the members of a general staff. This was made apparent during our recent strained relations with Chili. The object of the war college as generally understood will be to prepare officers of the navy for the performance of the functions of a naval general staff.

NICHOLLS CROUCH.

The Author of "Kathleen Mavourneen" Now on His Deathbed.

Prof. F. Nicholls Crouch, F. R. S., author of "Kathleen Mavourneen" and other famous songs, is dying at his home in Baltimore. Prof. Crouch is eighty-four years of age. His mind occasionally wanders and he hums his old songs. His wife and children are with him.

Prof. Crouch was born in England, July 31, 1803. He comes of a family noted for generations back, for their sterling worth and their accomplishments in the literary and musical world. At an early age he evinced a strong predilection for music, and, after studying with capable masters in London, was admitted, on his superior genius and merit, as a student of the Royal Academy of Music, London, just established by King George IV. as high patron and a body of English noblemen. Here he was a favored student and received instruction from such celebrated masters as Dr. Crotch, Thomas Atwood, Sig. Crivelli, William Hawes, Thomas Hayden, Richard Lindley and Sig. Pistrucci. With other students of the college he was in frequent attendance at Buckingham palace, Brighton and Windsor castle. By royal command, at the death of George IV., he was present at the coronation of William IV. and Adelaide, and subsequently at the coronation of Queen Victoria. Prof. Crouch entered upon a business life more than once, but returned again to his true vocation, music. He has held many prominent positions in the profession, in both Europe and America, and has also made a reputation as a poet and a critic. He was one of the founders of the Society of Science, Letters and Art of London, and continues as one of its most honored members.

Prof. Crouch has composed music of all descriptions, but is best known as a ballad writer and as the author of "Kathleen Mavourneen," which he wrote in 1835, and which has been sung by every celebrated vocalist the world over, from the time of Susan Hobbs to our day. Prof. Crouch until lately has led a busy, active musical life.

JAPANESE FIREMEN.

How They Fight Fires in the Land of the Mikado.

Plenty of Pluck and Enthusiasm Displayed, But No Common Sense—An Englishman's Experience in Tokio.

Of the many enemies in nature the Japanese have to fear, including earthquakes and typhoons, plagues and volcanic eruptions, fire is the most dreaded. Against it they are ever on the watch and guard, and yet they suffer more and oftener from its ravages than from any other cause. Most of the buildings throughout all the country, with some exceptions in cities like Tokio, are built of wood, or of bamboo and paper, and thatched with dried grass, or shingled, are exceedingly light and inflammable, and offer great opportunity for the outbreak of fire and no protection whatever against it. Very frequently whole villages and towns are swept away and completely destroyed by fire in a single day.

In Tokio and other cities, and in fact in all towns of any size, are tall watch towers where a man is constantly on the lookout to discover the first signs of fire. The towers in Tokio have been erected in localities short distances apart. They were instituted there as far back as 1625. They are simply immense ladders, often of great height, with a bell at the top and a place for the watchman to stand or sit. By a code of taps on the bell the watchman can indicate the part of the city in which a fire breaks out. When an alarm is sounded from one tower all the others take it up and continue to announce the location and progress of the fire. The system is very like our own fire bell system. Five watchmen patrol the streets, carrying a lantern in the left hand and in the right an iron staff with a bunch of rings at the top. As the watchman goes along he thumps the ground and calls out: "Look out for fire."

In Temple Bar a writer gives an interesting description of how Japanese firemen fought a fire in the town where he was sojourning. He turned out as the guest of the fire brigade. The brigade was equipped with only three hand-engines, "squirts," and it had the assistance of a hook and ladder company. The officers' horses were kept ready for a call. When the alarm was heard from one of the fire lookouts the man at the station tower hammered loudly on his bell, the men turned out, the officers hustled into their uniforms, jumped on their horses and ordered things for a start. The captain armed himself with a huge wisp of horsehair, a kind of substitute for a baton of authority, and the lieutenant waved a long spear from which hung a horsetail, the standard of the brigade. The brigade harnessed itself to the engines and the procession started, officers first and visitors bringing up the rear.

When the brigade reached the fire half a dozen houses had been gutted, and others were going up like paper lanterns. Hundreds of people were rushing wildly around, trying to save their household goods, and there was the usual panic, only greatly intensified because the danger was great and near to every inhabitant. The engines had lots of water, but they did little good. The hook and ladder company worked like monkeys, swinging about from beam to beam, and climbing over the burning houses with the greatest pluck. They worked well, too, but worked only at the burning houses, and like the men with the engines, they could hardly get from house to house as fast as the fire. There was unbounded enthusiasm and pluck, but no common sense. The captain and lieutenant waved their horsetails and shouted, but they knew nothing of fighting a fire. The writer says one American engine company would have put out the fire, or stopped its progress, in an hour. Dozens and dozens of houses were burning like paper.

The visitors could stand it no longer, and they suggested to the captain that he turn the work of the hook and ladder company on a group of untouched houses in the direct path of the fire, and try to make a gap that the fire could not cross. The captain looked on with amazement and ordered them back. But after a few more houses had gone up he took their advice. The people were aghast at the brigade's leaving the fire and tearing down untouched houses, and there were strong protests. But a number of the houses were torn down and the course of the fire was stopped.

Horse Running Forty Miles an Hour.

Few horses have made a mile dash in less than 1:40; Salvo, in 1890, made it in 1:35½, which is something truly wonderful. Let us analyze these figures: To begin with, it is nearly forty miles an hour—a speed averaged by few railway trains. There are 5,280 feet in a mile, so that for every one of the ninety-five (95) seconds he was in making that mile he had to get over fifty-five and three-tenths feet of ground. Just think of the wonderful speed he was moving at—a half a hundred feet for each beat of a man's pulse!

FIRESIDE FRAGMENTS.

—To clean wells of foul air throw down a peck of unslaked lime. The heat produced carries out the foul air with a rush.

—Cocoanut Cookies.—Rub one teaspoonful sugar and a half teaspoonful butter to cream; add one well beaten egg, two tablespoonfuls sweet milk, one and one-half teaspoonfuls baking powder, a pinch of salt, a teaspoonful of grated or desiccated coconut, and flour enough to roll out well without sticking. Roll thin and bake in quick oven.—Orange Judd Farmer.

—Poor Man's Pudding.—One quart of milk, half a teaspoonful of rice, salt to taste, teaspoonful sugar, and one tablespoonful of butter. Bake quite slowly for two hours; when it is creamy take immediately from the oven. You can tell if it is done by tipping the dish; if the rice and milk move together it is done. A cup of raisins and lemon or vanilla may be added.—Detroit Free Press.

—Vegetable Soup.—Two potatoes, two onions, two turnips, one carrot, a little parsley chopped fine, salt to the taste. Cut the potatoes in quarters, slice the onions, cut the turnips in quarters, slice the carrots. Put all in a stewpan with three pints of water, and salt to the taste. Boil it down to one quart. About fifteen minutes before it is done add the parsley. Strain it, and serve with light bread or toast.—Boston Budget.

—Chocolate Blanc Mange.—Half a box of gelatine dissolved in cold water, quarter of a cake of Baker's chocolate (melted over steam), one quart of boiling milk. Pour half the milk on the melted chocolate and let it boil up again, the other half of the milk pour on the gelatine. Pour the two together, add one large spoonful of sugar, and mould.—Household Monthly.

—Cream Crisps.—Make a dough of one cupful of this cream and a little more than three cups of graham flour. Knead until smooth, then divide the dough into several pieces and place in a dish on ice for an hour, or until ice cold. Roll each piece separately and quickly as thin as brown paper. Cut with a knife into squares, prick with a fork and bake on perforated tins until lightly browned on both sides.—Good Health.

—Eggs and Bacon.—The bacon must be cut very thin and the rind removed; if possible, cook it before the fire. The fat that is not used should be saved from time to time to fry the eggs. Unless eggs are liked hard, the nicest way to fry them is to have the fat in the pan hot enough to make a bit of bread rather a dark brown, the pan may then be removed from the hot range, the eggs should be ready, broken into saucers, pop them into the fat, keep dipping the hot fat over them, and they will become white on top and nicely cooked without putting them back on the range. Serve on the bacon or on buttered or gray toast.—N. Y. World.

—Cleaning Willow Furniture.—The simplest method is to wash it with warm water and castile soap, wiping it very dry with a soft cloth, and then drying thoroughly in the sun, or near the fire. If one cares to bleach it, have a packing box large enough to hold the willow articles. After washing, put into the box without drying; then into the bottom of the box put a small dish of burning sulphur. Cover the box, and at the end of half an hour take out the article, which will be bleached. Willow and rattan furniture is now stained, giving variety and doing away with the necessity for cleaning.—Ladies' Home Journal.

EARLY CHICAGO.

A Record of a Battle Fought There Two Centuries Ago.

In the year 1635, Tonty says in his Memoir, "I arrived at the Fort of Chicago where M. De la Durantaye commanded." This was the first fort there of which we have any account, and was probably a stockade structure constructed by Durantaye in 1685. Tonty also marched from the Illinois with sixteen Frenchmen and two hundred Indians to take part in this campaign, and according to one account he came by the way of Chicago and mustered some recruits here, perhaps from the garrison of the fort. He led his party across the country to Detroit, where he met Durantaye and two other famous pioneers, La Foret and Daniel Greyson Du Ruit, from whom the present city of Duluth takes its name. They had a large body of French and Indians from the upper lakes, and the united force pushed on to Niagara and joined the governor-general's army at the rendezvous on the southern shore of Lake Ontario, near the Seneca country. Two thousand five hundred men marched through the wilderness toward the great town of the Senecas, with Durantaye, Tonty and Laith, and their couriers de bois in the van. In the narrow defile the advance, separated from the main body, came upon an ambush of three hundred Indian warriors, who closed upon their rear with yells of triumph, thinking this detachment to be the whole army. But better leaders for such a fray there could not be than these three intrepid Frenchmen, who held their wood-rangers steadily to their work, until suddenly through the forest came the main body, headed by four companies of the fighting Carignan regiment, and the Senecas sullenly abandoned the field. Their great town was taken and destroyed, and down to our own time their descendants knew the scene of their crushing defeat by the French as Dyagodyin, or "The Place of a Battle."—Edward G. Mason, in New England Magazine.

These Soft Jobs.

The young man had received a fat government job, which was largely in the nature of a snap. One day a friend of his who had been noticing how little work he did to earn his salary tackled him.

"I say, Walter, my boy," he began, "you don't perform a great deal of labor, do you?"

"No, I don't have to."

"Don't have to? Ain't you expected to work?"

"Of course not," was the candid reply. "It takes so much hard work to get a job like this, that the authorities haven't the nerve to ask a man to do anything more to earn his salary after he gets it. See?"—Detroit Free Press.

A VERY FAIR QUESTION.

There Are Times the Humblest Spittle Ought to Kick.

"I was in the mountain regions of West Virginia not very long ago, remarked the drummer at the Cadillac to the usual crowd, 'and one day as I drove along in my buckboard I overtook a man in front and asked him to get in with me. He did it without coaxing and I began to question him. 'You live here, I suppose?' I said for a starter."

"Yes, an' hev fer ten ye'r," he replied, rather sharply, I thought."

"Are you a farmer?"

"Kind of a one. That is, my wife tends to the place, an' raises enough fer us to live on, but I mostly preaches."

"Oh," I said, with increased respect, "you are a local preacher. It's a noble calling, sir."

"P'raps," he answered curtly, "an' p'raps not. It don't pay much."

"No?" I queried negatively.

"No, tain't a gold mine, I reckon."

"Of course not, but it is a labor of love, and your reward comes after a while."

"That's what they been tellin' me round these parts, but a man's got to live some how. I preached last night at the Lick Run meeting house, and I took up a collection of twenty-four cents. Sunday over on Hurricane I got thirty-two cents and footed it eight miles back and had a cold dinner. I ain't never averaged more'n seventeen dollars a ye'r in the whole ten ye'r, but I never raised my voice agin hit till now."

"And why now?" I asked.

"Because they're going to cut my salary down; say I'm gittin' stuck up an' proud an' wear store clo's, and I need tamin'." Hold up," he exclaimed, as we came to a path leading off the road, "I've got to git out here, an' I'm much obliged to you fer givin' me a lift, but before I go I'd like to ax you as a far minded man of you don't think cuttin' my salary under existin' conditions ain't a little like wallupin' the gospel into the mud?"

I assured him I thought it was, and with a hearty shake of my hand, he hurried away down the path and I went on my way pondering.—Detroit Free Press.
